

The most spread authoring tools in public sector in the EU

This is an openly published report based on deliverables of the Pilot Project Pilot “We4Authors” on Web accessibility for web authoring tools producers and communities (LC-00788801) lead by Funka in collaboration with CTIC and funded by the European Commission.

In the report, we use the term CMS (Content management System) as synonymous to authoring tool.

Websites analysed and identified CMSs

Following the methodology, the study analysed more than 10,800 pages within over 1,700 European public body domains. See the complete list in the Appendix I.

The system was able to recognize and characterize the underlying technologies of the 48% of the websites identified. Thus, after the identification process, 832 concrete (61 unique) CMSs were detected. After clustering and ordering by the number of occurrences, the list of these CMSs is shown on the following table:

Table 1: List of CMSs detected

CMS features analysed

The main technological features to be represented in the matrix are:

Feature	Description
Is CMS	Flag that indicates if the software is a real CMS or not. This is used when the automatic tools gather information about the software that is not a real CMS (e.g., Google Search Engine is considered as a CMS to Wappalyzer).
Application Server	The system needed to run the CMS server.
License	License of the CMS. The most valuable option is that the CMS is under a non-restrictive license.
Operating System	Platform required for the clients to access the CMS. Multi-platform support would be the most valuable option.
Programming Language	The programming language in which the CMS is coded. The most valuable option is any of the open and well community-supported programming languages.
Friendly URLs	Support of customizable URLs. This is useful to increase usability of the website.
WYSIWYG Editor	Support of a graphic editor that make the edition process easy.
Multilingual support	Support of multilingual features.
Built in applications	Relevant libraries and applications that the CMS includes.
Last update	Date of latest software update.

Table 2: Features of the CMS Matrix

Websites where the CMS could not be identified

There can be several reasons why the chosen methodology has not been able to recognize and characterize CMS in all automatically analysed websites. After a further manual analysis performed on a cluster sample of the 52 % where no CMS was detected automatically, the experts concluded that the main reasons are security and high system customisation.

Security through obscurity is a cyber-security technique based on the secrecy of the implementation or design of the systems to reduce vulnerabilities and compromise risks. This mechanism intends to minimise the publication of elements (i.e., code, HTTP headers, etc.) that might help to identify the software that operates the content management systems. Through this technique, system administrators put barriers to the detection of key details of the out-of-the-box CMS like vendor or version. The methodology could not identify those CMS that are ad hoc developments or those that are heavily customized.

There is no clear pattern as to specific sectors or sizes of websites where the CMS cannot be detected. In most countries, half of the websites are unidentified. The percentage is slightly higher in Bulgaria, Croatia, Cyprus, Hungary and Lithuania. It would be valuable to perform further studies in these countries, but it is out of scope of this project. The following table shows the specific percentages per country.

Literature review and results acceptance

As part of the research project, the partners carried out a scientific desk research, reviewing literature in order to find already previous studies in the scope of the analysis of the CMS that are most used in the public sector in the European Union. This research arose no relevant results, due to the lack of similar resources to determine accurately the types of the most used CMS in this field. Although this, the literature review serves the experts to contrast and verify the results obtained by automatic means.

At global level, the team found several interesting references, such as *Content Management Systems Used by Government Agencies*ⁱ, published by the United States Government with a complete list of technologies used by each of the federal agencies. In Europe, no such list was found, and at a country level this information does not seem to be easily accessible.

There are some academic studies where the project experts extracted information. For instance, Analysing the characteristics of open government data sources in Greece (Alexopoulos, C. et al.)ⁱⁱ, assesses the Open Government Data Sources in Greece. Also, some commercial pieces of news, like in the case of Magnolia, publicizing they support the e-government in Sloveniaⁱⁱⁱ. Nevertheless, since this is not a trustworthy and official source of information, and the data is incomplete, those articles only were used as internal orientation.

In addition, some other articles like Knowledge management ecosystem based on drupal platform for promoting the collaboration between public administrations (García-Holgado, A., & García-Peñalvo, F. J.)^{iv} are also related to CMS and public administration, but focused on how to implement electronic services in the multi-level structure of the government sites, although they do not provide specific information on the use of the different CMS platforms.

The desk research also considered another approach, looking for accessibility reviews and comparisons of CMS platforms. The experts analysed two types of publications:

- a) The definition of the general implementation concepts to get accessible webs by using CMS (Nedbal, D., & Petz, G.)^v and (Matausch, K., et al.)^{vi};
- b) Reviews of W3C ATAG (Authoring Tool Accessibility Guidelines) fulfilment in different CMS. As an example, Influence of web content management systems in web content accessibility (López, J. M., et al.)^{vii} compares six open source CMS (Plone, Joomla!, Typo3, EzPublish, OpenCMS and Drupal) exploring their accessibility features.

As the bibliographical research did not offer relevant results, the existing literature only served the team to complement the automatic CMS collection and analysis. The experts gathered complete data sets of CMS usage from a neutral point of view, using the websites W3Techs⁸ and BuiltWith⁹. These two websites offer statistics according to their extensive automatic tests of different websites to extract their implementation technologies. Both of them have specific contents for CMS systems. The distribution of the main CMS platforms, according to these sites, can be analysed at a glance in the following illustration.

⁸ https://w3techs.com/technologies/overview/content_management/all

⁹ <https://trends.builtwith.com/cms/traffic/Entire-Internet>

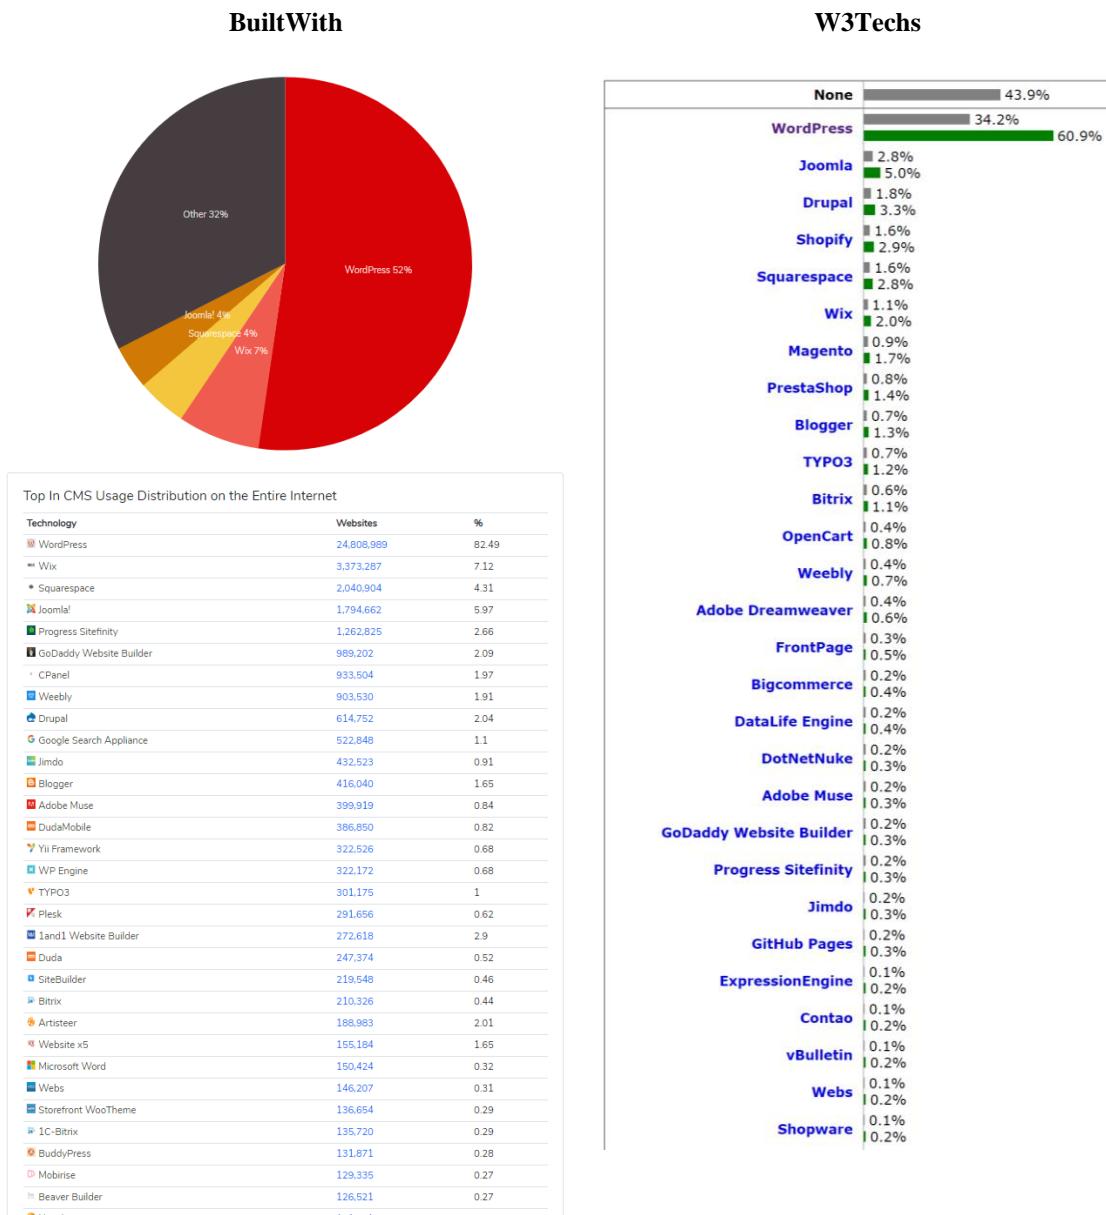

Fig. 1. BuiltWith and W3Techs rankings of popularity

Having a look at the data from these two sources, two main results can be stated:

- Both of them agree that Wordpress is the most popular CMS across the Web.
- They differ in the percentage of use of the rest of the platforms. Although this, the implementation technology is an objective parametre since they provide different results because both of them analyse different subsets of the Internet. In order to highlight the different percentages, in the following figure the main differences from the percentage of use of the most-used CMS are shown.

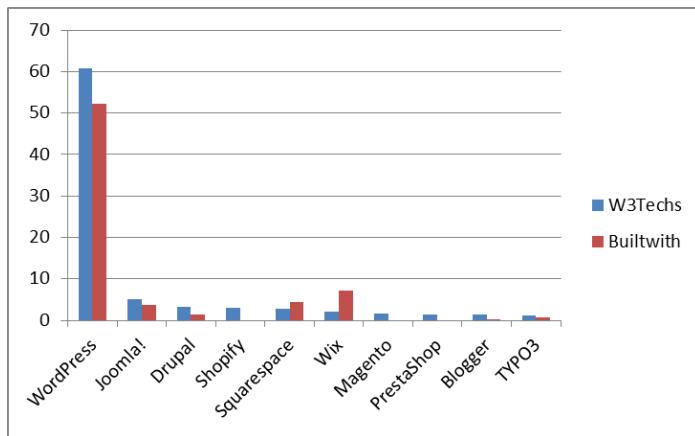

Fig. 2. Comparison of popular results of BuiltWith and W3Techs

Taking into account that these two sites offer quite different results, it was expected that the results offered by We4Authors in the CMS identified in Section 2 were also different. The following table describes the results of the We4Authors analysis and the percentage of use of the other two sites:

Table 5: CMS popularity figures

As it can be seen in the previous table, data are different according to the different sources. All of them extract a subset of sites, they analyse their CMS platform and then they extrapolate the data to all the Internet. But the way of selecting the subset is quite different in the case of We4Authors, as we have built a sample that is more descriptive of the scope we are trying to reach: the sample identifies CMS of the main public bodies websites in EU28 (the intersection in the following figure). So if the sample is more representative, it is fair to suppose that the results are more aligned with the real world situation in the public sector than the results included in the other sites.
